SPORTS CARD SELL ALERT: EVAN CARTER CALLED UP

The Rangers are calling up their top prospect, outfielder Evan Carter, to make his MLB debut on Friday against Oakland. Carter will take the place of All-Star Adolis García, who will go on the injured list with a right patellar tendon strain. MLB Pipeline ranks Carter, 21, as the No. 8 overall prospect in baseball. Carter is a player we've pitched as owning some of the most undervalued baseball prospect cards available to make profits on. For those holding Carter in your inventory, now is the time to get those prints listed.

Carter has tallied nearly 1,000 minor league at-bats before this callup, hitting for a solid .288 average while smashing 27 home runs and 152 RBI's. The promising outfielder has showcased all 5 tools at the minor league level, proving to be a more than capable base stealer and possessing a serviceable arm. While Carter doesn't have many cards that have spiked over the last week or two, those that have owned his cards for over a month have seen gains practically across the board. For example, his 2020 Bowman Draft Chrome 1st DP Auto in Raw is up 63.7% the last 30 days, and his 2020 Bowman Draft Chrome 1st DP Auto Refractor parallel in PSA 10 is up 27.9% during this time period as well. If you're holding any of the cards below, we recommend that you get them listed to avoid taking on additional risk:

2020 Bowman Chrome Draft 1st DP Auto (Raw) - Up 63.7% last 30 days

2020 Bowman Chrome Draft 1st DP Auto Refractor (PSA 10) - Up 27.9% last 30 days

2020 Bowman Chrome Draft 1st DP Auto Refractor (PSA 9) - Up 50.8% last 30 days

2020 Bowman Chrome Draft 1st Sapphire Edition (Up 27.8% last 90 days)

If you recently took our advice and picked up Evan Carter, or have Carter prints stuck at PSA, this isn't necessarily a complete L. With Carter being called up this late in the season, he maintains eligibility to hold his rookie status, and we could see Carter return to our top rankings list if he becomes available again at a dip.
